

Diablo 2 is an epic single player RPG that creates a visceral fantasy experience. For the real Diablo 2 fans, there are some special items that have not seen general release in-game or via official websites. There is one particular item, the Fiery Burdekin Tunic, which many players would like to see become available again on the realm. This article will explore why this item hasn't been released yet, explore its history and some of its lore as well as speculate on what could be done to make it more accessible for all players. The idea of this article comes from tjchristian's post on the r/d2classics forum (http://www.reddit.com/r/d2classics/comments/2a5s0b/item_pack_6_the_long_awaited_fiery_burdekin/) The idea of this article grew into speculation that the item may have been released via the Beyond the Tristram event, however this has yet to be confirmed or denied by Blizzard. The Fiery Burdekin Tunic is just one of the many items that are not currently available in any form in-game. There are plenty of other items that were seen in previews and in promotional media and even some screenshots and movies that seem to indicate these items existed in some form however they can no longer be found. The Fiery Burdekin Tunic, or as it is known on the realm, the Fiery Burdekin Doublet of Fire, was first seen in a preview video from BlizzCon 2009. The quality of this preview was so poor that it is impossible to tell whether this item had a special effect at all. A later screen shot from a promotional video for Diablo 2 showed the tunic fully equipped with no additional bonuses. The Fiery Burdekin Tunic can be obtained in game by any player who has played Diablo 2 for over 30 days. The item is available in the "Shirt" category of the Auction House. These items are accompanied by unused name, description and model files that attempt to describe their original appearance. The Fiery Burdekin Tunic is seen in several promotional media. It was seen in a promotional video from a company called Enki Media which did a comic book style animation for Diablo 2 explaining each of the classes and how they would be used in online matches. It was also seen in another promotional video "Diablo 2 Not Just A Game" in which there were 4 characters in the game with the power of using magic. The item also appears in an old Diablo 2 cinematic, although this one has not been confirmed to be the real item. These items can no longer be obtained by any means. They are no longer available for sale on the realm with the announcement that all single player items will be removed from sale on 11th November 2014. However when this date passed, none of these items were removed from the realm nor did they fall into non-existent rarity.
