"Kraken" is the first of many that will be added to the site, as the brief is to release a new 'epic creature' each week. A 10-tonne creature with 12 legs, a long tail and a pair of huge pincers which can reach 10 metres, this enigmatic creature is often associated with floods and tsunamis. One of the biggest, most fearsome and best-known of all creatures, it's believed to have been created around 2,000 years ago. "Since you are bringing to the people the idea of very big creatures, which have lost their place in nature and are forbidden to exist anymore, how would you explain the reasons of their extinction?" The Kraken was originally designed by Professor Mikhail Gelfand, a Russian zoologist. Mr Gelfand, who is also a Professor at the Yerokonovyi National Open University, Kiev, Ukraine, believes that the Kraken will be a better option than the yeti, a creature invented in 1930 which is half-human, half-bear, and whose existence is still debated today. "Today, the Kraken is a very unknown creature," said Mr Gelfand. "In 1938, before the Second World War, the US American publication Time Magazine called the Kraken the most interesting of the monsters that were discovered by German scientists. "

The Necronomicon is a grimoire written by an Arab magician and recorded by the Magus Olaus Wormius in the early fifteenth century. Lovecraft's work, however, also has its own precedent in the Necronomicon, a grimoire he invented. Also, in the popular media, Necronomicon has become a shorthand for any black magic grimoire. "The phrase might be said to contain the sum of all arts and sciences, in the form of magic and occultism"—Necronomicon was published on the heels of his widely successful trilogy of works honoring H. P. Lovecraft, and is the first sequel to "Shadow Over Innsmouth." In recent years, the line has become a shorthand for any grimoire or the dark occultism that appears in them.
