As of September 28th, 2017, trading volume on the Bitfinex exchange was around 30% of its previous levels. "You can't replace the old days with new days. We want to improve the trading experience for our customers," said a Bitfinex spokesperson. "Bitcoin is an open-source protocol. It doesn't need companies to tell you how it works. If you want to know how it works, you can always look at the code. So we just posted the code to our GitHub repository and customers can see for themselves how we built Bitfinex." Bitfinex is the first platform to go v1.0. It was developed by a group of developers that included Steven Nerayoff, an economist from Rice University and CTO of Bitfinex. The new Bitfinex v1.0 platform was launched on September 1st, 2017, with the release of a blog post. The Bitfinex developers promised to follow the best security practices and release new applications as soon as the new platform was ready. A bit of history The Bitfinex exchange was founded in 2012 by the same developers who founded Tether. Tether was designed to be a digital version of the US Dollar that would be backed 1-1 by US Dollars. "In less than a year, it became clear that the platform was not scaling with the rapid growth we were experiencing," said the Bitfinex spokesperson. "We needed to get to a place where the platform could support future growth, and we were not doing that." The Bitfinex developers decided to build a new platform for the exchange from the ground up. "We completely redesigned the core platform, we took the time to design the entire new platform from scratch, and we launched the new platform on September 1st, 2017." said the Bitfinex spokesperson. The new platform brings a lot of features to the exchange, such as cryptocurrency margin trading. "Our new platform is one of the first trading platforms to allow the use of cryptocurrency 2d92ce491b
