The invention relates to a hydro-mechanical transmission assembly for converting rotary motion of a hydro-mechanical device into rectilinear motion, and for converting rectilinear motion into rotary motion. As used herein the term hydro-mechanical device includes hydrostatic motors, hydrostatic pumps and the like. As used herein the term hydro-mechanical device includes hydrostatic motors, hydrostatic pumps and the like. The hydro-mechanical device is connected to a source of hydraulic fluid at a first end of a first arm, with the first arm being pivotally mounted to the hydro-mechanical device at a second end of the first arm. The second end of the first arm is connected to a hydro-mechanical device at a first end of a second arm. The second arm is pivotally connected to a drive shaft at a second end thereof. It is common practice to connect a hydro-mechanical device to the drive shaft of a machine with a mechanical transmission assembly, that includes a hydro-mechanical transmission assembly connected between the hydro-mechanical device and the drive shaft. The hydro-mechanical transmission assembly allows the machine to operate at more than one speed, such as when the machine is a loader having a first speed when unloading material and a higher second speed when loading material into a dump truck. The use of such hydro-mechanical transmission assemblies is not limited to material handling applications. For example, a hydro-mechanical transmission assembly may be used in assembly and packaging operations. In such cases the hydro-mechanical transmission assembly would convert the rectilinear motion of a conveyor belt to rotary motion 2d92ce491b
