* _Adobe Photoshop Elements 6,_ published by Peachpit Press and distributed by Adobe Systems Inc., offers the same basic features as Photoshop CS3, but comes at a lower price. It includes some of the most common Photoshop tools, but users may find it easier to use. * Adobe Photoshop Elements 6 for Mac OS X is available by itself, or you can buy a bundle including the program and a copy of the book _Adobe Photoshop Elements 6 Cheat Sheet_ at amazon.com. * Apple has Photoshop for Mac OS X, and it's an easy transition for the Macintosh user. See the chapter "Use It with the Mac," earlier in this book, for details. * Apple's premiere graphics program, iPhoto, is an excellent tool for handling photos and images. (See the chapter "Use iPhoto for Making Your Photos Beautiful," earlier in this book, for more information.) ## Use Photoshop to Enhance Photos Photoshop's powerful tools enable you to improve photos by enhancing their color, contrast, clarity, and color balance. You can also remove extraneous elements, like shadows, highlights, or noise, or lighten or darken, blur, change their aspect ratio, or add special effects. (The appendix of this book has a complete list of Photoshop's tools.) For more on this topic, take a look at the following sections.

Q: store multiple choice answers in a list Is there a way to make multiple choice questions and have the user choose from a list? I want to test the code I made for questions and options and the best way is a multiple choice. A: You'll need a list of answers to display. Use a choice box or select list. `var answers = new List { "one", "two", "three" }; var question = "Which number?"; var answer = null; ... answer = answers.Where(s => s == DisplayChoice(question)).Single();` Q: Best suggestion for local search engine? I'm looking for suggestions for open-source solutions that perform similar tasks to specific crawlers. The specific crawler I am looking for is for Google/Bing-style results, but the results need to be 'local'. I.e., users will enter a search query and I would prefer to have the results pulled from a local index rather than from the internet in general. I see a few basic options, but I haven't been able to make any of them work for my particular needs: ElasticSearch Solr Lucene/Xapian Sphinx Would anyone out there have any experience with a project that would cover my needs? Thanks! EDIT: This question is NOT a duplicate of How does one make custom Google like local search results. That question is only about the query part. This question is about how to make the index component work. A: Sphinx can help you to build such thing. It is based on Lucene and could use Tika and Xapian for indexing and fuzzy searching. Also you can combine Solr results with Sphinx query results (or Solr query results with Sphinx indexing). So I suggest you Sphinx. A: I've worked on a project that used ElasticSearch for similar purposes, for example for job search. But there was a number of problems with using ES as opposed to MySQL or PostgreSQL (which was more my expertise), but it did provide a lot of features for the project that we needed. From memory, the main problems were with indexing the data. ES does not index JSON, only plain text. This becomes a problem if you need to store

The Pen is a tool used to draw text, lines, and curves. The Pen can be used to create various effects such as calligraphic writing, fine lines, and even free-form shapes. The Paint Bucket is used to fill an area with a uniform color. It can be used to paint a background, or add color to an image. The Eraser, while often a tool used to remove unwanted elements from a photograph, can be used for removing an object in an image, or even for fixing a mistake or blemish. The Liquify tools allows you to modify the shape of an object, or adjust the thickness of a line. They are used for creating unusual effects like multiplying lines, or shrinking objects. A: Sometimes called the freehand paint tool. See the larger PDF: A: Have you seen this example of text painting?
