A: Maphacks are the primary reason why people pay for Diablo 2 expansions and patches. They are designed to allow people to experience the game in a different way, allowing for for instance an easier level-up or a different run/fight experience. The best known maphack is The Cave which was created by the now long-gone Zryd and has been used on a lot of hacked client servers.

It has some limitations in that it has the same visual experience on both servers that you have on one of your screen, which makes it pretty hard to configure (you'd need two versions of the game installed on your computer, one for each screen, with one for each version, and one copy of The Cave to run) There's also a fairly well known hack for retail Diablo 2 called MapHack for Diablo 2. This uses the same hack as The Cave but is designed to not have this limitation, allowing the experience to be adapted to different screen resolutions (a feature that makes it extremely popular, especially among the many people that play on their consoles and PC using an emulator that's designed to emulate the resolutions of the consoles). There are also a lot of fairly good hack-only maps that do have an exact replica of the retail experience, but aren't bound to any client. These are often easier to configure than The Cave and MapHack for Diablo 2, but are often limited to a small number of configuration choices (like only being able to play on your favorite map) Your best bet for the Windows version would be to just use the retail version, download and install it on a second computer, then move your saved games and items from the retail game to the hacked game and use your hacked client to access those files from the second computer.
