Field of the Invention The present invention relates to wireless communication, and more particularly, to a method of receiving a notification message through a Short Message Service (SMS) and a subscriber terminal supporting the same. 2. Related Art An SMS is a text message service supporting only 160 characters. In case of a SMS, that is, when receiving an SMS, when a terminal has a display mode capable of displaying messages in more than 160 characters, a field for displaying a whole message is truncated so as to display the whole message in a given amount of character information. However, with the development of radio technologies, a SMS-based service has been further developed. However, in such a development, an SMS-based service supporting the SMS has been offered as a supplementary function for a device such as a mobile telephone, or the SMS-based service has been operated using a cellular system such as a Global System for Mobile communication (GSM) or a Code Division Multiple Access (CDMA), which is characterized in terms of the direction of development rather than supporting the SMS itself. Therefore, various SMS-based services, such as a Push-to-talk over Cellular (PoC), a Wireless Application Protocol (WAP), a Push-to-WAP (POW), and the like, have been developed for a user's convenience. However, since the SMS service is a mobile communication service using existing radio technology, the SMS service has a tendency to be developed with a practical use instead of being developed for the sake of development. Therefore, users are provided with a function to display the service and a function to use the service via a terminal without performing any special operation. However, when a user forgets to perform an operation by the user, the user may be 3da54e8ca3
