How to remove Adobe Photoshop CS6 from Win 8.1

i have some servers, and i keep those servers and daily i update the servers. the problem is that xf-mccs6.exe is used by a lot of servers. so i am thinking of creating an uninstaller with xf-mccs6.exe. anyone has created an uninstaller with xf-mccs6.exe? A: I would recommend you to use the "Patch to upgrade from Adobe Acrobat XI Pro to Adobe Acrobat XI Pro" from the "Main menu" in the newly installed Adobe Acrobat Pro instead of running xf-mccs6.exe. It should provide you with the latest version if you are using the same serial number and make your life a lot easier! See "Upgrade from Acrobat XI Professional to Acrobat XI Pro" in the "Installed products" section of the Adobe Acrobat Professional Help menu (or on Adobe's website). By David Wharton | 8 years ago The town of Vorkuta, in northern Russia's arctic region, is 1,600 miles from Moscow and 10,000 feet below sea level. That's a lot of dirt. Which would be a lot of work to get rid of. Even with NASA's help. NASA's work is to build a giant centrifuge to get rid of the dirt, which is exactly what it sounds like: a giant centrifuge to get rid of the dirt. The gauntlet was thrown down yesterday, with a report by Russian news agency Itar-Tass stating that Russia's space agency, Roskosmos, had built and would soon test a centrifuge that could theoretically be built to pull the methane gas found on the Moon or Mars into the Earth's atmosphere. The idea is that at first the dirt would be burned, and then after a while the air would be purified and humans would be able to live at a high enough altitude and on otherwise uninhabitable planets. Like all the fun new ways NASA is exploring space, the news report is dubious, to say the least. The news report says that Roskosmos has already tested the centrifuge on "high-pressure gases" at the Institute for Space Research in Moscow. To date, only helium gas has been spun, but the centrifuge is apparently able to spin other gases. As the Itar-Tass report puts it,
