Chick retinal ganglion cells (RGCs) express both alpha and beta-subunits of the GABA(A) receptor, but the contribution of the individual subunits to the GABA(A) receptor remains unclear. In this study, we examined the effect of the gamma-aminobutyric acid (GABA) subtype-selective antagonists bicuculline, gabazine, and CGP35348 on the surface expression of GABAA receptors in chick RGCs using biotinylation experiments and surface staining. In the absence of bicuculline, gabazine, or CGP35348, we observed a transient decrease in the surface expression of GABAA receptors in cultured chick RGCs during the first 2 hours after the pulse application of GABA. The results from the bicuculline experiment demonstrated that RGCs express GABAA receptors containing the alpha1-subunit. Furthermore, the gabazine experiment demonstrated that RGCs express GABAA receptors containing the beta-subunit. The presence of gabazine in the culture medium abolished the decrease in the surface expression of GABAA receptors, suggesting that gabazine interferes with the biotinylation process. Bicuculline and CGP35348 each caused a significant reduction in the surface expression of GABAA receptors. The reduction in surface GABAA receptors caused by bicuculline was significantly greater than that caused by CGP35348. These results suggest that the transient decrease in the surface expression of GABAA receptors observed in RGCs following the exposure to GABA is mediated by the activation of GABAA receptors containing the alpha1-subunit and the GABAA receptors containing the beta-subunit. NASA has captured footage of the aurora from the International Space Station. The footage was captured by a variety of cameras on the ISS, and the video includes both colorful and sometimes even surreal shots of the Aurora. The aurora is caused by particles that are rushing towards Earth at a speed of about 230 kilometers per second. When these particles reach Earth, they ionize the air, which then emits light in a process known as bremsstrahlung. The effects can be quite beautiful, as the ISS footage reveals.
