As the successor of the highly acclaimed XPS Viewer, the program provides users with an easy-to-use interface for editing XPS documents. You can choose to edit individual pages or the entire file as a whole, and add or remove highlighters, text notes, headings and titles. You can open several pages at the same time, and you can either navigate through the pages using the navigation buttons, or you can simply use the scrollbar on the right. Selection and printing options can be enabled and disabled, and you can edit the section margins individually or set the top, bottom and left boundaries of the selected region. If you select all text, you can press CTRL and select a text highlighting style and/or ink settings. The program supports Microsoft Office Open XML (OOXML) format, as well as Windows 10 XML Paper Specification (XPS) 1.2 files. Even so, O'Rourke is promising a victory party. "You can sign up now to join us for what I'm calling a victory celebration. The date of the party is not yet determined but we're hoping it will be in the evening," he said in a video he posted to Twitter on Wednesday. By taking part in O'Rourke's victory rally, you'll be paying for his party, as well as the party of the people who oppose him: his Republican rivals Ted Cruz and Jeff Sessions. Signing up to a "victory celebration" is more of a victory for O'Rourke than for voters who oppose him, who view his supposed victory party as an admission that he's not actually a legitimate contender in the race and is just trying to buy his way to the White House. O'Rourke faced an onslaught of attacks from Cruz and his allies in response to O'Rourke's Monday announcement that he would announce a bid for president and support using taxpayer dollars to fund his campaign. So far, Cruz and his allies have killed his chances b7e8fdf5c8
