Q: MD5 hash equivalent? I am looking for a way to add a checksum function to the app I am currently working on. I have an algorithm already coded but I am looking for a hash for iOS so that I can verify that files have been properly downloaded. I am using the CoreData framework in my app. I have all the necessary code to hashing the files I need, I just need the equivalent for iOS for the MD5 hash algorithm. Any help would be much appreciated. Thank you. A: MD5 is not an algorithm for hashing. If you're looking for a wrapper around the Core Data framework, look into NSData.h. From there you can use functions such as: NSUInteger sizeofData() for the size of the data in bytes. (Note: this includes metadata surrounding the data, such as the total number of bytes the data takes up. You may not be interested in that.) NSData *data() for the data without metadata -MD5Hash NSData -MD5Hash CFData and so on. There are many. If you're looking for a library, check Apple's development tools documentation for things such as: NSString, NSMutableString and so on. A: I am looking for a way to add a checksum function to the app I am currently working on. Core Data has functions to get the size of the data it stores and the time the data was stored. You can get a hash of a string at a given time and store the hash as a string in Core Data. Then you can store that hash back into Core Data. The time it was saved and the hash can be cross-referenced. What's New In Photoshop CS5?

The Ontario government says a plan to help victims of sexual assault get free legal representation at trial is going nowhere fast. According to a recent report by the office of Ontario's Attorney General, which speaks for the government, new changes to the legislation that governs legal aid will take up to three years before they can go into effect. The new legislation, which was passed last year, is intended to make it easier for victims of sexual assault to seek justice and potentially get their attackers charged. The government has argued that the new law will provide more choice and greater access to legal aid than what is currently provided by the current system, but advocates and legal aid groups say the lack of funding and staffing is causing a serious backlog in legal aid that will only get worse with these changes. "We're really saddened and disappointed in the government's announcement today on legal aid reform," said Bernie Moonan, the executive director of the Centre for Research on Violence Against Women at York University. "It's not a choice. The resources simply aren't there." Don't just complain about a lack of resources Moonan says the backlog is the result of a combination of a "lack of staffing and resources" and a lack of services provided by legal aid providers. According to a report by the office of Ontario's Attorney General, which speaks for the government, new changes to the legislation that governs legal aid will take up to three years before they can go into effect. (CBC) Moonan says "a lot of the agencies that provide legal aid" don't have the resources they need to offer victims any sort of help. "You can't just complain about a lack of resources. I've got to be able to actually do something about the problem," said Moonan. "We've got people being murdered by their spouses... who have got nowhere to turn to even get support to leave their abusive relationship." 'Legal aid is not a right' The government's new legal aid reforms are aimed at providing legal services and financial supports for certain groups of clients, according to a Ministry of the Attorney General news release last year. "Legal aid is not a right but a privilege," the government said in a news release. Most people will be left with the choice to pay for their own lawyer or to receive public legal aid. Moonan says that choice is a false choice and could force some victims to choose a lawyer over other
