There are a lot of sorting and management apps for your mobile phone, but it's so difficult to find the one that lets you sort your collection in a custom way. There are several apps that allow you to sort images by different criteria such as by the date, date added, file type, directory, or size, but none of them come with a unified look and feel so as to make the whole process easier and more intuitive. TheSort Photo Manager, however, appears to be the latest attempt at addressing the problem. It's an app that was released a little over a year ago, and it offers a unified design for the sorting and management of images. The best thing about it is that it replaces the sort by date function with the sort by location function, making the whole process easier and more accurate. You can either open the application and manually scan and add pictures from your device or have it automatically open up whenever you connect a storage device (like a SD card). The application takes care of each option as though it were a folder, so there's no need to worry about sorting either pictures or albums. Opening the app you will see that it looks like a plain folder, but once you put your finger on the folder you'll see a panel pop up. It's a floating window that hosts tools you can use while working with the application, with buttons to create albums and folders, make changes to the sorting system, sort pictures in bulk, sort files in bulk, and more. As you sort your images, it'll always preview the same size frame of your pictures first, giving you a preview of what you'll be dealing with after. From there, you can
