But there's more going on than that. We talked with FIFA Game Director David Rutter about the new features and the state of the franchise in general. Rutter said the entire new game will be playable offline, with full leaderboards and goalscorers, even in training mode. There will be a far more varied and organic story to the game, beginning with the opening mission, which will see players traveling through Africa. While there are lots of new animations, the revised movement model is best seen in the story missions. "You will find that the matches move at a much faster pace," said Rutter. "The scoring is much more dynamic than before. For example, if you receive a good pass, you can perform a backheel and control the ball. We have reimagined the game in many areas." Another new experience is the Global Game Share. There will be a way to instantly share game videos with friends via the new Facebook Connect. This will allow them to instantly compare and show off clips of their favorite goals or highlights. "We've made a lot of investment in realism and gameplay," said Rutter. "It's not just about scoring goals, it's also about moving the ball into position, entertaining players around the box and creating a team balance. We want to take advantage of the media and there are a lot of user stories in terms of broadcasting and sharing with friends." FIFA 22 will feature an emphasis on community. Rutter said that the new squad editor allows players to create their own players with new costumes, including an English Premier League strip. Players can also use the Hero mode to create their own legends, using the players they pick to create their teams, and compete in matches against opponents who also use the same players. FIFA 20's New Player Model FIFA 22 features a new player model. Unfortunately, it's a good thing for players on existing game discs. The same top-notch artificial intelligence and ball physics effects won't be possible, but the new model is a massive improvement for those who have purchased the game. Players will be able to see almost every inch of their bodies in real-time. "As a maker, this is the most rewarding feature for me," said Rutter. "We were looking at other sports, looking at player models

Enzymatic synthesis of xylan polymers with multiple side-chains at C-1 and 2 in sugar beet pulp. This paper reports the synthesis of xylan polymers with side-chains containing trisaccharide and tetrasaccharide branches in the backbone. As sugar beet pulp contains no or little xylan, exogenous xylanases in combination with the most commonly found native xylanases have been applied to the enzymatic synthesis of xylan polymers. It was shown that hemi-xylanases from the basidiomycete Pholiota nameko and from the ascomycete Aspergillus niger DSM 11965 are able to hydrolyze arabinoxylan into xylan oligosaccharides. After the removal of arabinose with L-arabinofuranosidase the xylobiose is mainly produced in both cases. The xylobiose is either cleaved by a xylosidase in the case of Pholiota nameko or hydrolyzed into xylose and xylobiose by a beta-xylosidase in the case of Aspergillus niger DSM 11965. After the treatment of xylobiose with beta-xylosidase beta-xylosidase, a
