Adobe Photoshop has long been the standard for digital artists and graphic designers. Even though it's bundled with Adobe Creative Cloud, many creative types download a standalone version of Photoshop. But even that is getting increasingly difficult to do. The Adobe Photoshop Creative Cloud download started to become complex as it includes a dozen or so other applications, like Illustrator, Adobe Lightroom, InDesign, Dreamweaver and others. For professionals who have access to Photoshop Creative Cloud, it's a no-brainer to get a subscription. However, if you're like me, and you don't have a fancy subscription, you're going to need a way to download Photoshop on a computer without an Adobe Creative Cloud subscription. Both of these formats contain font information, so a font file, like the ones included in this book, can be embedded into a TIFF or PDF file. Some of the most important characters in text are the letters E, U, O, P, and space. By using the Photoshop Text tool, you can add text to an image, specify font color and size, and place text using a few methods. Authorities in the U.K. have launched a new blockchain-based ransomware scheme that targets individuals, organizations, and the U.K. government. U.K.-based computer security firm Cyphort said Wednesday that it uncovered the scam, which it calls BitBond, in an ongoing program the company runs to uncover cybercrime schemes. The researchers uncovered links between BitBond and a well-known Russian criminal ring known as Varlaim, which has previously been involved in numerous attacks on the NHS. BitBond also traces back to a number of other Russian groups, the company said. The ransomware — named after its Bitcoin cryptocurrency payments — was released after being pushed to certain computers by a malicious email attachment. According to Cyphort, the attackers are using this method to avoid detection by antivirus software, which is programmed to identify files that are digitally signed by the owner. The company said that the attack is very similar to one in September, which targeted individuals in the U.K. Another such attack, discovered in April, targeted U.S. government institutions, it said. By the end of Wednesday, the ransomware had spread to over 900 users in the U.K. and the company estimated that the cost of paying off the criminals would amount to around £250,000. In a statement, Deputy Assistant Commissioner John Gapper of the Metropolitan Police said: “The threat that crime and cyber-crime pose to individuals and businesses in the U.K. is getting increasingly complex and so it is vital that the police and law enforcement bodies bring together specialists who can collaborate to combat these problems. This is exactly what Cyphort has done with their network of security experts, allowing them to spot potential threats even before they appear online, helping to safeguard the U.K. against such attacks.” The U.K.’s National Cyber Security Centre (NCSC) also joins in on the criticism, saying in a statement: “Unfortunately, last year was a record year for ransomware attacks and it’s only going to get worse.” Most of the victims affected by the U.K. scam are in central London, but there has been a spike in attacks in the north of England and the U.K.’s South East. Cyphort says that in these cases, the hackers targeted people and organizations who were affected by the NotPetya attack, a highly destructive ransomware scheme
