Features Include: - Better compatibility with Direct3D 11 Emulators - Direct3d 11 Options.Q: Java Concurrency: Event Logging I have a Java program which is using multiple threads. Each thread executes a service call to the database, but the number of threads may vary, and they all log their activities using a common logger. I do not want the logging statements from each thread to be separate in the log. I know that I can use synchronized or Thread.sleep() to allow the threads to execute one at a time, but that is not ideal (I would have to hack in a sleep delay between the execution of each service call). Is there a better way to handle this situation? A: You have several possibilities: use java.util.concurrent.atomic.AtomicReference instead of ordinary variables if you want to do anything sophisticated with the contents use database transactions to control access to the log design the log to serialize output More details here: Latest Stories Thanks to all the Warriors interested in the August ClimaHOT Program.
