Players' movements and actions are captured using 2 SONY IMX 318 "Sensics" cameras that are worn on top of the player's heads as well as the player's running back. Sensics cameras track the player's movements and actions in space using the LAG camera system. LAG sensors are mounted on a player's body, providing data on the player's position, action in space, angle and velocity. The resulting data is fed directly into the FIFA engine, where it is used to create realistic reactions, players' styles and game play.
