Refreshing Cleaning Tips For the Holiday Season People always want to look their best and you can help them do so just by providing them with clean clothes. You can have them look their best by simply cleaning their clothes in your washing machine instead of throwing them in the dryer and they will smell fresh for much longer. Here are a few more tips that you can use to get your home smelling great this holiday season. Wash Clothes before Putting Them in the Dryer You will be shocked how much better your clothes will smell if you wash them first. As you know, detergents break down the dirt and fiber in the fabric, and when you add them to the dryer, they will dry out the clothes. If you wash the clothes first, they will absorb the detergent more quickly. A lot of people have a clothes dryer that does not do a good job drying clothes but it is worth it to have your clothes dry faster. Use Only Washcloths for Washing Using only washcloths is a very effective way to clean, and you can easily make your own out of paper or cotton balls. Simply place a washcloth in the wash liquid, rub, and let it dry. You can then throw the washcloth in the trash instead of using a paper towel to dry your clothes. If you wash your clothes inside your home, then use a cloth towel only for drying. These towels will absorb too much water to be used with any laundry detergent as well as your clothes. A cloth towel will maintain its shape and not stretch out like a towel made of fabric. Fluff Your Clothes More Fluffing your clothes is one of the best ways to get them to look and feel good again after cleaning. You can use your hands to fluff the clothes. Just grab a handful of clothes and shake them up and down. Using your hands is a great way to clean d0c515b9f4

Category:Energy conservation in buildings Category:Building engineering Category:Residential heating Erdogan's authoritarianism is making the peace process more difficult in the country, with officials demanding that he be given greater control over the negotiations and undermining the chance to explore issues through the political process. Erdogan's ascendance, designed to ensure that a truly democratic future for Turkey lies behind him, has deepened the crisis at home. While the conflict in Syria has made the need for access to peace talks greater than ever, both the government and the opposition are still held captive by the past; the blame game for the coup, as well as the circumstances that led to it, shows no signs of letting up. With Turkey split between warring factions, the country is in the midst of a serious economic and political crisis. While the worst of the crisis seems to be over, the country has still only partially turned its attention back to Turkey. For the past year, the country has been consumed with both militancy and tension. It has been at the very center of the Syrian crisis, home to refugees and a critical crossroads for economic traffic. For the country, this situation has meant more than just economic problems, though they certainly have a hand in that as well. Since 2012, the ruling Justice and Development Party (AKP) has been waging a war against an "armed terror organization" that they accuse of being atheist and not connected to the nation-state. The war has involved a military intervention in Syria as well as a crackdown at home. The AKP has lost many of the public's confidence for the first time in nearly a decade; Erdogan's approval rating is hovering around 50%, and the rate of support for the president is declining across the board. The coup has, in the eyes of most Turks, laid bare the true nature of Erdogan's leadership, revealing an authoritarian rule that threatens the very fabric of the state. Yet the coup has had a lasting effect on how Turkish citizens and non-citizens will identify with the state. For the public, this result is hardly surprising. Turkey's recently wounded democracy has an extremely negative image as a result of more than a decade of constant repression, with the notable exception of a brief and illusory period of "reform" that was quickly followed by a refusal to pursue political opponents that is, in fact, the only way to keep a democracy strong.

Northern Ireland doesn't have full civil rights for LGBT people and equal marriage is the first step towards full civil rights. It would remove the cause of division between Northern Ireland and Great Britain, the Motherland. Northern Ireland also has the highest rates of HIV, and the rate of gay men being diagnosed with HIV is 2.5 times higher than in Great Britain. We want to bring LGBT rights to Northern Ireland. People in Northern Ireland are not in a better position with respect to equal marriage than people in the rest of the UK. In Northern Ireland, 25% of the population are Catholic and the Church leadership's views are deeply homophobic. We believe that although religious views should be respected, they should not be in conflict with equality and equality is not a matter of religion, it is a matter of humanity. Labour believes that all human beings regardless of race, sexuality, or religion deserve the right to marry. Marriage is the building block of family life and is the foundation of the social, emotional, and spiritual wellbeing of the individuals, families, and communities that make up society. LGBT people have spent the last century in fear and in hiding but also have undergone tremendous advances. Gay marriage is not only about LGBT people, it is about all of us. The fact that so many countries in the world are moving towards marriage equality demonstrates that LGBT people are equal and deserve to be treated as such. It is important to note that the equal marriage debate in Northern Ireland is not over the legalisation of same sex marriage. The equal marriage debate in Northern Ireland is over the rights of LGBT people. We are concerned with the rights of LGBT people and that means that whether same sex marriage is legalised in Northern Ireland or not, is irrelevant to the issue. We must ensure that marriage equality
